Qualifications Summary ~

Through my education as a printmaker I learned many valuable skills for life after academia. Working in a shared studio space required the utmost organization, as well as the ability to quickly and effectively communicate with a group. The processes of printmaking required dedication, problem solving, and an attention to detail to learn the necessary skills to create multiple prints. These techniques required a strong work ethic, and follow through, to see projects come to completion. Working in a shared space, and as a shop technician/monitor, also taught me how to work with a group to trouble shoot the best resolutions to problems, as well as a discipline in individual work ethic. These universally applicable skills allow me to contribute to any working environment to the advantage of the project at hand.
